IN RE: IMPRELIS HERBICIDE MARKETING, SALES PRACTICES AND PRODUCTS LIABILITY LITIGATION

MDL No. 2284 11-md-02284

THIS DOCUMENT APPLIES TO: ALL ACTIONS

MEMORANDUM

Pratter, J. September 13, 2017

Diane Hulings appeals the decision of the Imprelis Arborist Panel, leaiming that DuPont wrongly denied her claim for Imprelis damage to four trees. Because the Appeals Panel decision in Ms. Hulings's case was neither arbitrary nor capricious, the Court will affirm their decision and deny Ms. Hulings's appeal.

BACKGROUND

Because the Court has written about the history of this litigation in several opinions, the following summary will be brief.

In the fall of 2010, DuPont introduced Imprelis, a new herbicide designed to selectively kill unwanted weeds without harming non-target vegetation. After widespread reports of damage to non-target vegetation, the Environmental Protection Agency ("EPA") began investigating Imprelis, leading to lawsuits, a suspension of Imprelis sales, and an EPA order preventing DuPont from selling Imprelis. In September 2011, DuPont started its own Claim Resolution Process to compensate victims of Imprelis damage. Despite this voluntary process, various plaintiffs continued to pursue their lawsuits, alleging consumer fraud/protection act violations, breach of express and/or implied warranty, negligence, strict products liability, nuisance, and trespass claims based on the laws of numerous states. After months of settlement discussions, including mediation, the parties came to a settlement agreement. The details of the settlement relevant to the appeals process will be discussed in greater detail below.

A. The Settlement

The Imprelis Class Action Settlement ("Settlement") covers three classes of Imprelis Plaintiffs. Among the three settlement classes is a property owner class. That class includes all persons or entities who own or owned property in the United States to which Imprelis was applied from August 31, 2010 through August 21, 2011, as well as all persons who own or owned property adjacent to property to which Imprelis was applied and whose trees showed damage from Imprelis on or before the date of entry of the Preliminary Approval Order, or February 11, 2013. Under the Settlement, property owner class members who filed claims by the claims deadline would receive tree removal (or compensation for tree removal), payments for replacement trees, tree care and maintenance payments, and a 15% payment for incidental damages. The Settlement included a warranty that provided for all benefits but the 15% incidental damages award for Imprelis damage that manifested after the claims period closed but before May 31, 2015.

Section III.C.1.a.xi. sets forth the appeals process for property owner class members who file settlement claims. See Docket No.117-2, § III.C.1.a.xi. That provision sets the framework for the "Imprelis Alternative Dispute Resolution Panel," comprised of three arborists – one chosen by DuPont, one chosen by Interim Co-Lead Counsel and Liaison Counsel, and one chosen by the other two arborists. The Agreement describes the Panel's role as "review[ing] and determin[ing] appeals from the Settlement Claim Process, and decisions by DuPont relating to objections submitted in the course of the Imprelis Claim Resolution Process." The Agreement limits the authority of the Panel to "resolving questions or challenges relating to determinations of: (a) tree ratings; (b) the height, and if applicable, the circumference of trees at issue for valuation and tree care respectively; (c) the number of trees qualifying for compensation from DuPont under the Settlement Claim Process; (d) whether a Class Member has provided adequate Spray Records; (e) warranty coverage; and (f) application of those requirements set forth in Exhibit 19 [outlining the types of symptoms found in Imprelis-injured trees and the types of evidence required for claim consideration]." Id. The Agreement also specifies that the Panel members will be subject to the Code of Ethics for Arbitrators in Commercial Disputes and that the evidence they consider must be that presented by the parties. In the context of discussing Panel review, the Agreement states that "Any Party maintains its rights to seek review from the Court." Id. The Agreement does not set forth the standard of review to be applied by the Court in reviewing Panel determinations. The form filed by claimants appealing Panel decisions limits Court review to the record submitted to the Panel.

On February 12, 2013, this Court preliminarily approved the Settlement, and on September 27, 2013, the Court held a Final Fairness Hearing to determine whether the Settlement provided fair, reasonable, and adequate compensation to class members. On October 17, 2013, the Court granted the Class Plaintiffs' Motion for Final Approval of the Settlement. The Order entering final judgment as to the Settlement states that class members are "permanently enjoined and barred from instituting, commencing, or prosecuting any action or other proceeding asserting any Released Claims, against any Releasee . . . by whatever means, in any local, state, or federal court, or in any agency or other arbitral or other forum" February

5, 2014 Order, Docket No. 274, ¶ 7. The Court also retained exclusive jurisdiction over any action relating to the Settlement:

Without affecting the finality of this Order, the Court shall retain jurisdiction over the implementation, enforcement, and performance of the Settlement Agreement, and shall have exclusive jurisdiction over any suit, action, motion, proceeding, or dispute arising out of or relating to the Settlement Agreement or the applicability of the Settlement Agreement that cannot be resolved by negotiation and agreement by Plaintiffs and DuPont.

B. Diane Hulings's Appeal

Ms. Hulings was originally offered a settlement that provided for the removal and replacement of three trees. She objected to the offer, in part because she believed the three trees marked for removal and replacement were improving and could be saved and in part because she identified two additional trees that she believed were damaged by Imprelis. DuPont sent another arborist to inspect her property in February, 2013. That inspection confirmed that the three trees originally marked for replacement had improved and that one other tree showed some damage. Ms. Hulings was then offered a new claims resolution agreement providing tree care compensation for four trees. She objected to this amended claims resolution agreement and claimed that there was still one more tree that DuPont had not included in the agreement.

In 2015, DuPont visited Ms. Hulings's property again, and as a result of that inspection, the newest offer included removal and replacement for a fifth tree, as well as tree care for the four trees previously identified. Ms. Hulings once again objected, claiming that tree #4 had died, fallen down, and been removed prior to the 2015 re-inspection, and that therefore she should receive removal and replacement compensation for that tree. Ms. Hulings did not submit any photographs or other evidence regarding the condition of that tree, however, and so DuPont denied her objection. Ms. Hulings then filed an appeal with the Arborist Panel, seeking removal and replacement compensation for tree #4, as well as compensation for three additional trees that she claimed were showing signs of Imprelis damage. The Panel denied her appeal.

LEGAL STANDARD

DuPont urged the Court to adopt the standard of review used for arbitration, meaning that the Arborist Panel's fact finding should only be displaced when "there was evident partiality or corruption in the arbitrators," where the arbitrators "refus[ed] to hear evidence pertinent and material to the controversy," or "where the arbitrators exceeded their powers." See 9 U.S.C. § 10. Courts have described this standard as making arbitration decisions "substantially unreviewable." See Del. Dept. of Health & Social Servs., Div. for Visually Impaired v. U.S. Dept. of Educ., 772 F.2d 1123, 1128 (3d Cir. 1985). Many of the appellants, by contrast, either implicitly or explicitly expect de novo review.

The Settlement Agreement is silent on this issue. The Court will chart a middle course. On the one hand, DuPont is correct that deference is due to the Arborist Panel's expertise, particularly because the panel was assembled in a fashion intended to be neutral, with each party choosing one arborist and those two arborists selecting a third, and because the Arborist Panel clearly was intended to provide an alternative dispute resolution mechanism to streamline the appeals process, save all parties time and money, and reach resolutions as swiftly as possible. On the other hand, the parties carefully crafted the Settlement Agreement and yet still failed to include any explicit guidance to class members or to the Court regarding a standard of review, thereby giving class members no direct notice of what they would encounter at this level of review. This is an especially frustrating failure given the unique nature of this settlement. Indeed, a search of other multidistrict litigation and class action practice has yielded little helpful guidance or authority.

Taking this middle course, the Court will apply an "arbitrary and capricious" standard of review. See Del. Dept. of Health & Human Servs., 772 F.2d at 1128 (distinguishing standard of review under the Federal Arbitration Act from "arbitrary and capricious" standard); Wise v. Wachovia Sec., LLC, 450 F.3d 265, 268 (7th Cir. 2006) (contrasting "arbitrary and capricious" standard with standard applied in review of arbitration award). That is, factual findings and conclusions drawn by the Arborist Panel will be set aside only if they are "without reason, unsupported by substantial evidence or erroneous as a matter of law." See Miller v. Am. Airlines, Inc., 632 F.3d 837, 845 (3d Cir. 2011) (internal quotations omitted). Such a standard gives effect to the parties' clear intent that the Arborist Panel's role be more than merely advisory and recognizes their expertise and neutrality, while still giving class members an opportunity for a more meaningful review of the Panel's decisions.

DISCUSSION

Ms. Hulings argues that because tree #4 was previously rated as a 1 and then subsequently died, she should receive removal and replacement value for that tree. She also argues that three additional trees have shown signs of Imprelis damage, even though they have never been included in any of her claims resolution agreements. Based on the photographs submitted by Ms. Hulings, however, it is difficult to conclusively determine what caused damage to her trees. As to tree #4, in particular, the only photograph is from 2012; there are no photographs of the tree in a state of greater decline that would allow for an evaluation of the cause of the tree's eventual death. The mere fact that the trees declined after the application of Imprelis is not enough to prove that Imprelis was the cause of the damage, and the Court cannot conclude that the Arborist Panel, which is comprised of three experts who have now reviewed scores of Imprelis appeals, acted arbitrarily or capriciously in denying Ms. Hulings's appeal.

² Ms. Hulings points to the Appeals Panel's statement that only tree #4 appears in her 2012 photos as evidence that they did not thoroughly and carefully review the record – she points out that tree #6 also appears in those photographs. However, she also admits that the cover sheet accompanying her photographs that she submitted with her appeal to the Panel erroneously listed the 2012 photographs as part of the 2015 photographs. Therefore, it is likely that the Panel's confusion arose from this error.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Court will affirm the Arborist Panel decision and deny the Ms. Hulings's appeal. An appropriate order follows.
